Many families of children with disabilities and school staff work well together as they discuss and develop a student's IEP. On occasion, issues arise and additional meetings are needed to work through concerns. This is normal.

There are other times, though, when disputes between the family and school require additional support. In Wisconsin, we are fortunate to have the Wisconsin Special Education Mediation System (WSEMS). It provides free dispute resolution services for parents of children with disabilities and schools.

This session will cover the various services provided by WSEMS and how to access these services. There will be time for questions!
